SEPTEMBER.

The gold-rod is yellow,
The corn is turning brown,
The trees in apple orchards
With fruit are bending down.

The gentian's bluest fringes
Are curling in the sun;
In dusky pods the milk-weed
Its hidden silk has spun.

The sedges flaunt their harvest
In every meadow nook;
And asters by the brookside
Make asters in the brook.

By all the lovely tokens,
September days are here,
With summer's best of wealth,
And autumn's best of cheer.

A NATURAL ICEHOUSE.

Discovery of a Frozen Subterranean Lake in Montana.

About 15 miles north of Lewistown, Mont., and two miles from the Gilt Edge mine, there has been discovered a cave similar to none known in the United States. The discovery was made by Mr. Chas. Kelly while prospecting. About a week later a party of six, headed by Mr. Kelly and equipped with miner's lamps, axes, picks, ropes and overcoats, visited the curious cave for the purpose of exploration.

The party reached the entrance of the cave about 10 o'clock in the morning and immediately began their investigation. The mouth is an irregular crevice in the sloping ledge. For a distance of about 100 feet the bottom is almost level, and the crevice widens gradually to a width of nearly 50 feet. Then there is an incline of about 20 degrees for a distance of 50 yards. Here, instead of a rocky floor, a solid body of ice was found. Fifteen minutes of hard work with the axes and picks showed that the ice was solid to a depth of more than two feet.

The party continued their journey for about three-fourths of a mile from the entrance till the winding avenues and rooms made it hazardous to proceed farther, danger of losing their way back to day light being imminent, owing to the fact that a compass carried by one of the party had become useless on account of being affected by vast deposits of iron in the walls of the cave. Much difficulty would have been experienced in returning only for the forethought of a member of the party who marked the route taken by strokes of an ax.

The width of the cave varies at different points from 25 to 300 or 400 feet, and the roof at some points reaches within four feet of the ice, and in many places so high that it could not be seen by the light given out by the lamps carried by the explorers. At no point in the cave was any water found, only an occasional dripping from the roof. In places drafts of air were encountered that almost extinguished the lamps carried. Mr. William Arneaux has located a mineral claim at the entrance of the cave, and in this way intends to secure it from the government.

What Was the Millionaire?

H. W. P., a well known lawyer of Boston, discovered, on returning from a bank one day, that the teller, in cashing some railway-bond coupons, had overpaid him $200. He sent back the money to the bank. One day upon his speaking of the incident to a millionaire client, the latter exclaimed "You are a fool! What did you do that for? I wouldn't have done it." The banks never rectify errors in their favor. "I don't know about that," replied Mr. P., "but I happen to labor under a disadvantage. I have to shave myself, and you see I wouldn't like to look in the glass every morning and see a scoundrel."—Boston Evening Transcript.

She Will See to That.

She—I never saw such a man! He never has any money but he fritters it away.

He—Arn't you, then, afraid of marrying him?

"Oh, dear no. After he has married me he'll never have any money."—Boston Transcript.

Met the Death of Absalom.

The fate of Absalom was duplicated in the case of Jedediah Blanton, a farmer who lived alone near South Bend Ind., working his farm alone, doing his own cooking and washing and seldom exchanged a word with any one for weeks at a time. He wore clothes of the style of 50 years ago, and his hair was long and hung about his shoulders. It was Blanton's custom to go to town about twice a year to dispose of his farm produce and lay in a stock of provisions. He was last seen alive on his way home from one of these semi-annual visits, when he was riding his little old mule, which bears the name of Beelzebub.

Three days afterwards Beelzebub was seen cropping the young grass from the roadside about a mile from Blanton's cabin, says a correspondent of the Philadelphia Times. On catching sight of the approaching stranger, Richard Leeson, Beelzebub trotted off at once toward the thicket which marked the boundary of Mr. Blanton's land, but seeing that Mr. Leeson did not follow, returned again and went toward the thicket, looking back at the gentleman, who presently suspected that the mule was trying to induce him to enter the wood, and at last he did so.

Presently he came across the dead body of the eccentric old farmer, whose hair, having caught in the branches of a thorny bois d'arc, held him suspended in the air. His neck was found to be broken, and it is supposed that, riding through the thicket his hair caught by the thorns and had jerked him from the saddle, breaking his neck, as he hung by his entire weight. About him were scattered the provisions he had bought in town, and in his pocket was found his purse, containing nearly $1600 in paper money, which proved that he had not been disturbed since being killed.

Furniture Worship.

There exists a large company of women who, with the best intentions for the care of their household and their children, still commit one heinous, hygienic sin by what may not be inaptly called "furniture worship," and so carefully are they of carpets, sofa-covers and curtains that some rooms in their houses are maintained in a cellar-like darkness except for short intervals when they are thrown open for "company." If one thing is more certain than another, says the New York Independent, it is the fact that all sorts of microscopic growths love the darkness. One has only to search a dark spot in the forest to find myriads of them, and dark, sunless closets and corners come a close second with mold, and if examine carefully, a dust filled with spores.

The army of scientists who are studying the nature and habits of the microbes inimical to health and life have lately been making extensive experiments on the effect of exposing them to the action of light, and with one accord they tell us that the creatures were killed outright, but the residue had their vitality so interfered with that they could not and did not develop normally if at all. Sunshine is a very cheap article, has no offensive odor like sulphur, and can be easily applied; and what matters it if the carpet does fade a few shades, if the room can be wholly sweet and wholesome. There are some parlors, especially in country houses, haunted by an abiding musty odor; they never had a thorough bathing in sunlight.

"Nobody Knows It."

Here is something for our merchants to cogitate upon: A peddler went all over a neighboring town selling stone coffee pots. Among the many fleeced was the hardware man's wife. One day when he went home to dinner his wife informed him what a nice thing she had bought and showed him the coffee pots. She then learned that her husband had them in his store for sale a year at half the price she paid for hers. When told of this she said: "Well, why don't you advertise them? Nobody knows it."

A Little Daughter

Of a Church of England minister cured of a distressing rash, by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Mr. RICHARD BIRKS, the well-known Druggist, 207 McGill st., Montreal, P. Q., says:

I have sold Ayer's Family Medicines for 40 years, and have heard nothing but good said of them. I know of many

Wonderful Cures

performed by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, one in particular being that of a little daughter of a Church of England minister. The child was literally covered from head to foot with a red and exceedingly troublesome rash, from which she had suffered for two or three years, in spite of the best medical treatment available. Her father was in great distress about the case, and, at my recommendation, at last began to administer Ayer's Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which effected a complete cure, much to her relief and her father's delight. I am sure, were he here to-day, he would testify in the strongest terms as to the merits of
